Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

I'm having trouble listening to your car show. It's not so much you guys but rather my car. If I listen at home or in my friend's car it's loud and clear but I just can't seem to get good reception on my vehicle radio. The truck has only 60,000 miles and is a 03 Chevy. I started getting poor reception a few years ago and it has become worse. The FM reception is poor, and the AM is very poor. It has kind of a popping sound that changes speed of pops as the engine changes speed. Where would I begin to fix this problem myself?

Scott in Clayton New Mexico

Dear Scott,

It could be many things that won't be too hard to fix if you have some basic mechanical skills. It could also be the entire radio but let's start with checking the cheaper stuff first. A radio is only as good as its antenna so start there. Check the mast and the mounting. The antenna should be tight where it mounts to the vehicle. Check the cable as well. The cable needs to have no corrosion at any connector joint from the antenna to the radio. If all looks good, try a test antenna that is not mounted to the vehicle. If it fixes the problem, it is likely the antenna. If not, then it is time to have some diagnostics done at the local radio repair shop.

Take care, the Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I don't have any jumper cables in my car at this time and would like to start carrying some. You would think it would be a simple task, just going to the store and picking out a nice set but when I did, I got so confused that I had to write. They have big ones and small ones and ones that go in the lighter socket. They have jumper boxes you recharge. Where do I start? Can you help me with the different kinds and what might be better for me? I have not needed to jump my vehicle ever, but I park in a ramp at work and every week it seems like one of my friends needs a jump and I'm just a helping kind of person.

Darryl in Martinsville Virginia

Dear Darryl,

There are a lot of choices yes, but what you choose will depend on personal preference and how you will be using any of the items you mentioned. Heavy gauge jumper cables with large ends are good for jumping a car quickly and often. A rechargeable jump pack also works well for this. The difference is you need to get close to your vehicle to connect cables while the pack is self-contained. Very small gauge cables need more time to charge before cranking and the one for the lighter-to-lighter socket can take a very long time and not provide the needed cranking amperage.
