Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

Guys I've listened to the show for years and I feel I'm well versed in the basics of auto repair so when I was told I had killed my car because of something I had done dozens of times in the past on other vehicles I was concerned. I purchased a used 2010 Toyota Prius Hybrid for the fuel savings and the technology. After a few weeks of driving the battery failed in my driveway and I could not get it started. I figured I would just give it a quick charge then drive to the store to pick up a new battery and that's where it all went bad. I connected my charger for a few hours and then tried to start it, but it would still not run. I then installed a new battery and the car powered on but would not move. I had it towed to the dealer and they inspected it then called me to say that charging the car caused a failure in two of the vehicle computers. They did not tell me why, but I had no choice, so I just fixed it. How can this be?

Chris in Berkley California

Dear Chris,

Chargers can put out 20 volts or more without a load so when connected to a totally dead battery that voltage can destroy the computers. Always verify the proper charging procedure before charging your car to avoid this kind of damage.

Take care, The Motor Medics

Dear Motor Medics,

I'm all shook up literally. I can't seem to get my car to stop vibrating at all speeds. The problem seems to be worse when I am less than 30mph, but I feel it all the time. Sometimes at low speeds the steering wheel even shakes left to right. The vibration started a few months back and seems to be about the same. My tires are about two years old and have 20k miles on them and appear to be in good shape with no excessive wear. My mechanic said the front-end components all look very good and that my tires are properly balanced. Do you have any thoughts?

It sounds like you may not have a tire balance issue but rather a tire belt issue. You can balance a square tire, really you can, but it will only be smooth on the tire machine. What I'm saying is even if the weight of the tire is balanced out the tread can be irregularly shaped causing a hop or side to side movement when in contact with the road. With the vehicle on the shops hoist ask them to observe the tread of the tire and see if it stays steady as the tire rotates. If it has a lot of movement up and down or side to side, you may have a broken belt which is causing the shaking you are experiencing.

Take care, The Motor Medics
