Ask the Motor Medics®

Automotive Advice from The Under the Hood® Show

Dear Motor Medics,

My 2006 Ram 1500 truck is having problems while accelerating. The engine power is low when the RPM gets over 4000 RPM but is fine at a steady speed or when under 4500 RPM. My husband and I have spent a lot of time looking on YouTube, including your channel checking for easier things that we can do. We found out that it did not have a fuel filter, and we have bought a good Autel scanner so we can read codes, but there are no codes in the system, This problem came on gradually over about 5k miles and seems to be getting worse. There is only slight noise we think is coming from the drivers' side valve cover near the front. Should we pull the cover? If we do, what are we looking for?

Thank you, Everly in Yakima Washington.

Dear Everly,

Most people would not go as far as you have before reaching out to a repair shop. These Rams have had some cam issues we have seen in our shop. They tend to make some noise at first, which gets louder and increases as does the power loss. Pull that valve cover and look at all the rockers while you turn the engine over. If one or more doesn't move as much as the others there is wear present. This will cause a lack of cylinder filling and low power at higher RPM. Next, look at the cam and lifters and rockers for wear and consult a shop for the next step.

Take care, the Motor Medics.

Dear Motor Medics,

I'm trying to extend the life of my 2020 GMC 5.3 4x4 auto trans truck as long as possible, and I have started to shop for different additives which might extend its life. The truck only has 23k miles on it so it's still in perfect shape. I have been changing engine oil every 3k miles or 3 months and want your opinions on the additives and what things to maintain. Are additives worth the cost?

Thank you, Jack in Burnsville Minnesota.

Dear Jack,

With the cost of new and used vehicles being so high today many people are doing everything they can to extend the life of them. Additives are a great way to do that. While a vehicle can work just fine without them, they can last even longer, much longer when using the correct additives from good companies. The oil changes you are making are the most important but using friction reducing additives in the oil will help slow the wear process. Also, an oil system cleaner as directed will keep the engine cleaner helping to add to its life. Worn valve train components due to dirt build up are the number one cause of engine failure in our shop. Think about flushing the transmission at about 60k as preventive maintenance as well. Talk to your local shop for more information.

Take care, the Motor Medics.
